Color-changing ice castles are back in New Hampshire

The winter wonderland makes its return to New England this weekend.

Here's your chance to live out your "Frozen" fantasies.

MATT JUUL

New Englanders are probably sick of the freezing weather right now, but it might be worth braving the cold to see Ice Castles return to New Hampshire this weekend.

The Utah-based company's hand-crafted, "acre-sized" attraction is set to open once again in Lincoln on Friday, Jan. 5. The towering, 25-million-pound playground is pretty incredible, featuring everything from ice-carved tunnels and slides to frozen thrones and color-changing LED lights that sparkle along to music during the night.

"We are excited to bring Ice Castles back to Lincoln, New Hampshire, for a fourth year," Ice Castles CEO Ryan Davis said in a statement. "Every year, the castles are different. We create an entirely new and unique design each season."

In addition to New Hampshire, Ice Castles will set up shop in three other locations across the U.S., including Midway, Utah; Dillon, Colorado; and Stillwater, Minnesota. There will also be a pair of Canadian castles this year in Edmonton, Alberta; and Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Aside from being the perfect spot for an icy selfie, these amazing attractions also seem like the best places to belt out a rendition of "Let It Go" like Elsa. It makes sense, then, that Ice Castles will have a "Frozen"-style princess on hand for photo opportunities on Saturdays and Sundays.

And for guests who need a little heat during their chilly trip outdoors, fire performances will take place on Friday and Saturday nights, complete with fire breathing, hula and more.

If you plan on swinging by this winter wonderland, organizers suggest wearing boots and buying tickets online ahead of time. They also recommend that parents bring along sleds instead of strollers to help transport their little ones.

If you go:

Ice Castles, Hobo Railroad, Lincoln, New Hampshire, icecastles.com

The Ice Castles attraction will be open every day except on Tuesdays. Tickets are $13.95-$21 for visitors 12 and up, while kids between the ages of 4 and 11 can stop by for $9.95-$16.

Ski lodge pop-up bar debuts in South Boston

Enjoy all the amenities of a ski lodge without having to hit the slopes at a new pop-up bar in South Boston.

Publico Street Bistro & Garden has turned its courtyard and open-air garden into an après-ski-inspired concept for the winter. Dubbed the Lodge, the pop-up will officially debut at a special launch party Friday, Jan. 5.

While the temperatures continue to drop in Boston, locals will be able to warm up with the Lodge's fire pits and heated lounge areas. Flannel blankets and plush pillows will also be available to keep guests cozy as they check out the space's ski-themed decor, including faux moose-head displays, old-school signs and, of course, skis and sleds. An artificial snow machine will be on hand as well to provide a "true Alpine ambiance."

Guests will have plenty of fare to feast on thanks to executive chef Keenan Langlois. The Lodge's menu has an array of delicious bites that definitely channel an après-ski vibe.

Meat eaters can fill up on the Triple Diamond Slope burger sliders, featuring aged cheddar and grilled onions ($10), while cheese fans will have a slew of dishes to choose from, including the White Heat fried mac and cheese, which offers a fun take on the dish with sweet habanero peppers, hominy and manchego cheese ($8). Grilled cheese, arancini and a pair of pizza options will also be available.

On the drinks side of things, co-owner and beverage director Teodora Bakardzhieva has put together a cocktail menu that should help guests weather the winter chill.

Locals can sip a trio of hot offerings, including the spiked hot chocolate, featuring Grey Goose, housemade cocoa and chocolate bitters ($12), as well as the hot buttered rum, featuring Bacardi 8 and house butter batter ($12). The hot toddy is particularly tasty thanks to its mix of Teeling Irish whiskey, pimento dram, honey and lemon ($12).

The Lodge at Publico will be open from 6 p.m. to close on Fridays and Saturdays through March.

American Repertory Theater presents this dramatization of E.B. White's darling children's novel, probably the only book about a friendship between a spider and a pig ever committed to type. In world that's ever more crowded with angry, clashing voices, the story's message that anyone, no matter how small, can have a big impact just gets more important. This satire on modern culture tells the story of the chief curator of a Swedish museum whose latest exhibition, a simple piece reminding people to be kind to each other, is judged to be too boring—it'll never go viral, his bosses say. But when his own wallet is stolen and he figures out where the thief lives, his own capacity for kindness is tested. Through Jan. 17, Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave., $11, mfa.org

COMEDY

Tone Bell

This Atlanta-raised comic has performed many side roles in recent short-lived and/or unsung TV series, most recently the Netflix stoner comedy "Disjointed." It makes sense, then, that much of Bell's stand-up revolves around odd positions and reversed expectations, whether he's envying old people's earned indifference toward life, or overpaying his student loans just to get the creditors to pay him back. Jan. 4-6, Laugh Boston, 425 Summer St., $20, laughboston.com

Vermont-born, Hampshire College-educated Matt Lorenz is the one-man band behind this indie folk project. Started by an improv troupe in New York City, this group event—which is exactly what it sounds like, and yes, you still have to wear underwear, creep—has become a weird little tradition, spreading to cities across the world. The truth about the 'snow bomb' hitting the East Coast

It's here. SAM BRODSKY

Many are calling it "bomb cyclone," "snow bomb" or "bombogenesis," but if you set foot outside, you'll know it as the big brother of the bitter cold we started to feel this holiday season. The Weather Channel reported that the frigid weather is to blame for at least a dozen deaths across the U.S. as of Wednesday, and now, we're getting stronger winds and heavy precipitation.

The storm, which is expected to start Wednesday night and last until Thursday evening/early Friday, will bring 6 to 12 inches of snow to New England.

Metro spoke to meteorologist John Cristantello from the National Weather Service (NWS) to get to the bottom of what exactly we should expect from this "bomb" of a storm.

According to Cristantello, in simple terms, "bombogenesis" is an unofficial label given to storms that are rapidly strengthening. What we face Thursday will mainly be a "snow event" that will continue throughout the day and slow by early evening. New York residents should expect 3 to 6 inches across the city, and there's no prediction of mixed precipitation.

Cristantello predicted 35 to 45 mph wind gusts with temperatures in the upper 20s (nothing compared to that record-low New Year's Eve ball drop).

However, Cristantello said that temperatures will drop to around 10 degrees by Thursday night and early Friday morning. He noted there will be variations throughout the city, and with the wind chill, it will feel like 5 to 10 below 0.

A meteorologist from the NWS in Mount Holly, New Jersey, which covers forecasts in the Philadelphia area, told Metro that the storm — both temperatures and wind speeds — should hit Philly similar to NYC. Philly, however, is expected to receive only around 2 to 4 inches of snow also tapering off by late Thursday.

In comparison, Boston is expected to get hit harder, with up to 12 inches of snow and winds as high as 50 mph by Thursday night, according to the NWS site.

To ward off potential frostbite, Cristantello urged people to "try to dress in layers and cover all exposed skin."

Though weather is expected to be dry by Friday, we should brace for residual cold into the weekend.

Cristantello stressed that our main concern should be slippery roads that "will impact travel," adding that if you don't need to be on them, stay indoors.

"We've seen snow like this before," Cristantello concluded. "But all it takes is a little coating of it to create hazardous travel conditions."

Boston area braces for 'bombogenesis' storm

Bomb cyclone, bombogenesis, nor'easter, blizzard — call it what you will, all it means is we're in for a bad couple of days.

Boston snow is on the way, and the city is preparing for up to a foot of it this Thursday into Friday as a "bomb cyclone" drops furious snow and freezing temperatures over the Northeast.

The region is forecast to see snow starting late Wednesday night into early Thursday morning, according to the National Weather Service, which expects between 8 and 12 inches of accumulation throughout Massachusetts. The full fury of the snowfall will happen Thursday morning through the afternoon.

Boston schools will be closed Thursday, Mayor Marty Walsh said Wednesday. It was too soon to say whether schools would be closed Friday as well. Cars should be taken off the roads by 7 a.m. on Thursday, Walsh said, as a snow emergency will be in effect.

The biggest concern is the loss of power that will undoubtedly result from the storm. Homes without heat will be subject to possible record-breaking subzero temperatures over the weekend, making for a dangerous situation for vulnerable residents.

But forecasters also warned of a "variety of hazards" in the region and warned that travel would be treacherous due to whiteout conditions.

Boston Mayor Marty Walsh spoke at a news conference about the coming winter storm. DEREK KOUYOUNJIAN

"Expect strong damaging winds, power outages, blizzard conditions on the immediate coast, heavy snow, blowing [and] drifting snow, coastal flooding and high seas," NWS Boston tweeted Wednesday. The nor'easter will cause a storm surge of up to 3 feet, the NWS added, which will lead to some coastal flooding for the eastern Massachusetts coastline Thursday.

"This is a dangerous and potentially life-threatening situation for mariners," NWS Boston tweeted.

Bitter cold air with wind chills of 15 to -35 degrees is expected Friday and Saturday.

The MBTA said it will use snow-fighting equipment to keep train tracks clear, though the T's website says the system may operate with reduced service, slower speeds, or delays during and after snowstorms.

Walsh said the city was preparing to spread 40,000 tons of rock salt on Boston's roads and sidewalks starting Wednesday evening. More than 700 pieces of snow-removal equipment were ready to go, he said, warning of the impending freeze.

"Once the freeze comes in, it will be almost impossible to move the ice that is formed," Walsh said, emphasizing that the biggest challenge of this storm is the cold that will follow.

Residents can call 311 if they need to report incidents like burst pipes or other nonemergencies. However, he said, people should call 911 if they witness someone stuck out in the cold.

The Boston Yeti also weighed in on the upcoming storm, telling Metro: "To all of Boston: Please be safe and look after any neighbors in need during the storm. Also, make sure you're stocked up on food, water, and any batteries necessary to power up your favorite hand-held gaming consoles."

4 COLD-LIFE HACKS FOR KEEPING WARM THIS WINTER

Each morning, it dawns on us: It's f—ing cold out. But there are steps you can take to make the horrid experience of living life in subzero temperatures more bearable.

1. Electrify your life

Put an electric blanket on your bed and turn it on 20 minutes before you turn in for the night. In the morning, slip the blanket into your drawer to warm your clothes before you put them on.

2. Use every last drop of hot water

There's nothing like thawing your cold bones in a hot shower. But when you're done, don't let warm bath or shower water go down the drain. Instead, keep the water in the tub to add a little warmth and humidity to your home.

3. Mind the gap

Tap into your college smoking habits and use towels to fill gaps under doors to keep heat from escaping. Pipe insulation also works well, but it's not as nostalgic.

4. Quilt up

Don't be ashamed to use heavy quilts as curtains to keep heat from leaking out of windows, especially at night and during windy days.

An entire town gets into the King of Cats Festival. FODORS

Hang out with some friendly felines at these destinations for cat lovers.

Fodor's Travel

The Coliseum

The Italian word gattare is slang for "crazy cat lady," and to see le gattare in action, visit the Coliseum in Rome late in the day. That's when these dedicated volunteers arrive to feed the cats that live in the nooks and crannies and secret passages of this ancient institution. And what do le gattare feed the cats? Spaghetti, of course.

Japan's Cat Island

Cats outnumber humans five to one on Aoshima Island in the Ehime prefecture in northwestern Japan. Once a thriving fishing village, the population of Aoshima has declined to just 15 permanent residents. But the cat population continues to thrive, thanks in large part to the belief here that feeding stray cats brings wealth to the family.

While Aoshima is perhaps the best known, Japan actually has about a dozen islands identified as "cat islands."

King of Cats Festival

The French painter Balthus was fascinated by the image and movement of cats, often incorporating them into his work. He called himself "the king of cats." When he died at his home in Rossinière, Switzerland, the community honored his creativity with a biennial King of Cats Festival.

But this isn't your typical corn-dog-and-funnel-cake-filled festival. This is a summer-long community art project that encourages each business and household in Rossinière to create some piece of art that represents a cat. The public gets to vote on their favorite and the winner gets bragging rights.

The Cat Boat

A fabulous opportunity to scoop kitty litter during your vacation is at depoezenboot, which means "the Cat Boat." Actually, it's two barges floating on Amsterdam's Singel Canal that have been retrofitted as animal shelters. It's a beautiful setting, but lots of volunteers are needed to help keep it from getting too stinky inside because, you know, 50 cats produce a lot of pheromones. Yet, you can't beat the view and the reward of a having a grateful kitten napping in your lap at the end of the day.

Hello Kitty Rooms at the Keio Plaza Hotel

The overdose of pink cuteness may make you throw up just a little, but if you or the children in your life are fans of Hello Kitty, these hotel rooms will play right into your madness.

Hello Kitty toiletries, a Hello Kitty doll souvenir, and Hello Kitty bedtime snacks are among the treats that make the eight themed rooms at the Keio Plaza a destination for family travelers in the Shinjuku area of Tokyo. The Keio Plaza in the Tama area also has four Hello Kitty rooms.

Ernest Hemingway's House

The four dozen or so six-toed cats, all descendants of a cat given to Papa by a ship's captain in the 1930s, are the primary reason about half of the visitors say they come to Hemingway's home in Key West. These semi-freaky fur balls are free to roam the property, even where visitors are not allowed. Feel free to pet them, but don't try to pick them up. The cats will come to you if they are in the mood, but what else is new?

The Brookstown Inn

Sally, the resident cat at the Brookstown Inn in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, just wandered in through the front door of the 70-room boutique hotel. Staff there cater to her every need, as do many of the guests who appreciate it when Sally chooses to spend the night in their room.

Best Friends Animal Sanctuary

Wouldn't you like to spend a few days of your vacation scooping kitty litter for up to 550 cats? If you say no, that's all right. Most volunteers at the Best Friends Animal Sanctuary in Kanab, Utah, prefer to brush and play with cats or take them for a walk in the desert in a baby stroller.

With about 1,600 animals, the Best Friends

Animal Sanctuary is the largest animal-rescue facility in the country. Many vacationing volunteers stay in one of 12 on-site cabins and cottages. It's OK to take a kitten or two to your room for a little overnight snuggling. Area hotels allow you to bring Best Friends cats to your hotel as well.

Laughing Cat Winery

The official name is Carlson Vineyards, but most people know the Palisades, Colorado, vineyard as the Laughing Cat Winery because of the playful cat juggling mice on the labels. The Laughing Cat series includes semisweet wines like riesling, gewurztraminer, and a few blends. Hank and Gunny, the current feline residents, greet each guest with a handshake. Take that any dog that ever called a winery home.

Cat'n Around Catskill

If the word "cat" is a part of your destination, you simply have to do something with it, right? So the people in Catskill, New York, fully embraced their name with a public art project called Cat'n Around Catskill.

Each summer, about 50 fiberglass felines appear on the streets of Catskill disguised in some incredibly creative interpretations of our world today: surfer dude cats, Spider-Man cats and Katniss Everdeen. Cleopatra the Cat, Zombie Cats, Cats in Hats, Cat Scans. Cats in cap and gown, in tuxedos, in velvet smoking jackets — a different identity for all of their nine lives.

Kick off the New Year on the slopes.

ERIC WILBUR

If you're a weekend warrior preparing for another day on the slopes, then perhaps it has come to your attention that Saturday's high temperature in the Boston area is supposed to be somewhere around 8 degrees.

Up north, the current cold front that embroils New England should translate to a high temperature of -7 at Killington in Vermont, -3 degrees at Sunday River in Maine and an oh-so-balmy 1 degree in North Conway, New Hampshire.

So, you know, the NFL playoffs begin Saturday afternoon too, which probably makes your couch and a warm fire just as appealing an option this weekend.

Indeed, it's been a frighteningly frigid landscape of late for even the most ardent skiers and riders among us, many of whom enjoyed lesser crowds last week with some families bailing on their holiday trips due to the cold. Those who did brave the elements found great snow across the region, along with the promise that conditions can only improve.

But the biggest challenge during weather like this just might be introducing the benefits of our winter sports to newcomers.

It won't be perpetually negative up north all month, which means January will still remain the best time of the year to learn to ski or ride.

Hit the mountains without breaking the bank. ALL PHOTOS SKI VERMONT

The annual "Learn to Ski and/or Snowboard" month is the industry's way of bringing newbies to the slopes with special packages and skiing deals to entice beginners.

"It is our mission to grow the industry and share our love for the mountains with new skiers and snowboarders every winter," says Sarah Wojcik, Ski Vermont's director of marketing and communications.

In Vermont, that means a $49 lesson, lift ticket and rentals program at a number of different resorts. Age restrictions and blackout dates do apply, and reservations must be made at least 48 hours in advance. See skivermont.com for a list of participating resorts.

Many New Hampshire resorts will be offering a similar deal for $39. Check skinh.com for restrictions and blackout dates. Advanced reservations are also required.

At Sunday River, adult learn-to-ski and-ride packages are buy one, get one free, Mondays through Fridays, Jan. 13-31.

Westford's Nashoba Valley offers an adult lift ticket, group lesson and rental for $65 on Monday nights and Wachusett's $110 package includes a lift ticket for you, and a one-day learning package for a friend ($60 off normal price, must be purchased online only; wachusett.com).

It's the perfect time to learn. Financially, at least. The weather should play along too. Eventually.

Could 'McD,' Patricia stay put?

OPINION

Call me crazy, but when it comes to the upcoming offseason, I'm pretty sure the New England Patriots have a plan.

Plans can always change, of course. But if we've learned anything about the organization over the past 15-plus years, it's that they always have one.

If I'm reading the plan correctly, then the idea of offensive coordinator Josh McDaniels and defensive coordinator Matt Patricia choosing to stay in New England after this season isn't all that far-fetched, in my opinion.

I say that because as of now the organization's plan looks to revolve around Tom Brady. It's not such a bad plan, regardless of how good Jimmy Garoppolo turns out to be.

Garoppolo-mania has undoubtedly gripped New England. It's brainwashed some, for sure. And they've turned Brady into an average quarterback who's now become a heel with his evil personal trainer.

They're calling the Patriots fools for choosing a few more years of Brady, instead of — their words, not mine — 15 years of Garoppolo.

In a league where someone as good as Aaron Rodgers only has one Super Bowl ring in 10 seasons as a starting quarterback, I find it nonsensical to sit here and guarantee multiple championships for someone who's yet to play one full NFL season.

Josh McDaniels is at the top of several NFL teams' lists when it comes to hiring a new head coach. GETTY IMAGES

Don't get me wrong, Garoppolo looks great. But Brady is about to be crowned MVP and has a chance to win his sixth Super Bowl next month. The fact that I even have to remind some people of that is incomprehensible.

I'm pretty sure the Patriots don't have to be reminded of that either. And since they're seemingly all-in on winning as much as they can with Brady for the next couple of years, I'd like to believe this plan has been discussed behind closed doors.

If that's the case, I'd also like to believe that McDaniels and Patricia were part of the conversation. Question is, will they be all-in on this plan?

To which, I ask, why wouldn't they want to be?

Like I said, I'm in the minority on this one. It seems to be a foregone conclusion that both coordinators are on their way out the door. But McDaniels has already left once to become a head coach. And while Patricia has yet to leave, there have also been opportunities out there for him in recent years.

Yet, here they both are, in New England, and still winning.

McDaniels is 41. Patricia is 43. Let's say they don't leave the Patriots this offseason. You're telling me they'd never get another opportunity to become a head coach in the NFL?

That's ludicrous. If they stay, we'll be doing the same thing next January. We'll be talking about what teams would be a good fit for each guy. And yes, there will be more job openings next year, and every year after that. The opportunity for McDaniels and Patricia will always be there for them, whenever they want it.

Everyone is assuming the time for them to leave is now. They're pointing out quarterbacks that McDaniels might enjoy working with — like Mitch Trubisky in Chicago — or defenses that Patricia could improve — like the Detroit Lions.

But what if they both preferred Oakland? The Raiders and Jon Gruden seem destined for a reunion, and it might even be a done deal by the time you read this.

Look, only McDaniels and Patricia know what their plan is next season. But regardless of what jobs they interview for, there is a plan. And from my perspective, it seems the most logical plan would be to try and win a few more Super Bowls with the Patriots while they still can.

Easy for me to say, obviously. When the money's on the table, nobody could blame McDaniels or Patricia for packing their bags and signing on the dotted line. I'm just telling you, somebody will always be willing to write them that check.

And their number might be even larger if they stick with Belichick and Brady until the very end, which, contrary to what the Garoppolo-maniacs will tell you, might not be a such a bad plan.

Harrison ready for the playoffs

The former Steelers star isn't just coming along for the ride.

JAMES TOSCANO
@MetroBOS
sports@metro.us

With the way James Harrison was portrayed on his way out the door in Pittsburgh, you would have thought he just left the Boston Red Sox.

The Steelers were none too happy with Harrison's decision to sign with the rival New England Patriots after his release, and made it apparent in the days after the signing.

Comments questioning his work ethic and desire to contribute to the team came one after another in Pittsburgh, to the point where it almost felt like it was a legitimate distraction over there.

Honestly, if Harrison never played a single snap for the Patriots, the signing was worth it just for the fact it clearly bothered the apparently mentally-weak Steelers.

It all prompted Harrison to take to Instagram last week, where he explained his situation in Pittsburgh, which was essentially that he wanted to play, but the coaching staff didn't want him to. After asking for his release multiple times throughout the season, he finally got his wish, cleared waivers, the Patriots called, and here we are today.

James Harrison showed he had plenty left in the tank in his Patriots debut last Sunday against the Jets. GETTY IMAGES

Harrison played a total of 40 snaps over five games for the Steelers this season. In his Patriots debut in the final game of the regular season, he played 28. He was effective, too.

Signed by New England to help in the pass rush, Harrison proved that he could do more than just that. According to Pro Football Focus, he rushed the passer 13 times and dropped back in coverage six times. He was also on the field for 11 snaps against the run.

Harrison finished with five total tackles, including two sacks towards the end of the fourth quarter, one of which was a strip sack.

It was no surprise, then, to hear his new coaches and teammates stand up for him after his first game with the Patriots and with not much preparation time.

"Certainly it wasn't all perfect," Defensive Coordinator Matt Patricia told reporters. "But from a guy who came in and really tried to, from the first minute he was in the door, learn and understand what we were doing on defense and how he could be implemented into that. The study and the questions were great going through and walking through and putting a lot of his own individual time in this week to get caught up to speed."

Many questioned the Patriots' intentions by signing Harrison. Whether or not you think they did it to see if they can get any extra information on the Steelers out of Harrison, pass defense could also use improvement, where New England finished the regular season ranked 29th in passing yards allowed per game (251).

Taking a look ahead at potential matchups, the Patriots will play the Chiefs, Titans or Bills in the Divisional Round. The quarterbacks of all three of those teams all rank in the top 10 in rushing yards by a quarterback, which means setting the edge and containing them in the pocket will be important. Alex Smith rushed 60 times for 355 yards, Marcus Mariota 60 times for 312 yards and five touchdowns, and Tyrod Taylor 84 times for 427 yards and four touchdowns. They make things happen with their legs.

With that in mind, fellow edge defender Trey Flowers looks good to go for the playoffs, as he finished with three pressures on 20 pass rush attempts in Week 17. According to Pro Football Focus, Flowers leads all 4-3 defensive ends in the NFL with 18 hits on the quarterback (not including sacks).

And now he has some more veteran help with Harrison on board and another Super Bowl in sight.

Aries A change in lifestyle is apparent. Embrace whatever comes your way and make up for whatever loss you encounter. Getting along with others will help the process.

Taurus A change to your personal finances or a pending legal or health matter must be handled with intelligence. Exercise moderation when decisions need to be made.

Gemini Build a solid home base. The people spend the most time with should have similar interests and something to offer. Don't be tempted by people mired in bad habits.

Cancer If you want to pitch in and help a cause, do so, but not at a price that would be too high emotionally, financially or physically. Only offer what's reasonable.

Leo Don't let anyone come between you and your dreams. Plan your actions and execute them with intelligence. Now's the time to make a positive change.

Virgo Walk away from anyone using emotional tactics to get you to do or purchase something questionable. It's in your best interest to downplay your personal assets.

Libra You'll come up with great suggestions, giving you the chance to impress someone you'd like to collaborate with in the future. Make changes that will improve your life.

Scorpio Personal problems will surface if you are insensitive or take someone for granted. Nurture an important relationship before you are accused of neglect.

Sagittarius Educate yourself and look at all the angles before you engage in something that will require your undivided attention. Back away if you feel the least bit uncertain.

Capricorn An unusual opportunity will arise. Be sure that the information you are given is accurate before you get involved in a venture that could disrupt your personal objectives.

Aquarius Partnerships may need to be realigned to fit the changing circumstances you face at home. Use common sense to come up with a workable solution.

Pisces Put your heart and soul into getting ahead. A positive change will take place if you are ambitious and adaptable. Pitch in for financial gain to be yours. EUGENIA LAST
